ITB Clause 16.1	"The Bid Security shall be in the form of a Bid Securing Declaration, and any of the following"	"The Bid Security shall be in the form of a Bid Securing Declaration, or any of the following"

The laptop specifications are brand-agnostic, defined to meet enterprise requirements for performance, mobility, and productivity requirements rather than a specific model. This allows flexibility in selecting devices that meet the organization's operational needs.

The specifications are based on performance and operational requirements, not brand specific. Suppliers may provide any product or brand meeting or exceeding these requirements, ensuring fair procurement process.

The specifications remain unchanged as they reflect the required performance standards. Market scoping confirms that components such as RAM, NVMe storage, and modern processors are readily available, ensuring that these requirements can be met without compromising overall performance.

Amendments/inclusions/clarifications made herein shall be considered an integral part of the Bidding Document.

For guidance and information of all concerned.
